My daughter and I attended your program last night and I am so glad we did. Ironically enough one of the young men you spoke about died at the entrance to our sub division. Not a day goes by that we are not visually reminded of that tragedy. It was good for my daughter to hear the details, as unpleasant as they were. Also, I believe the speech given by the mom was catalyst in these kids getting the overall picture. I know it is hard to talk about her son and family, but real stories and people, validate the point that you are trying to get across to these kids. Not only does it make an impact on our kids's but validates their child's life. I know the parents that speak for you have made an impact. They have probably saved more lives than they could know. Having lost a child in a very different way and speaking to terminally ill children's parents helped me find a way to make sure my son's life mattered....It takes a long time to come to terms with accepting that bad things happen to good people. And life is incredibly random. Maybe not so random with traffic accidents but a little info goes a long way. Your course should be mandatory for all teen drivers.

Thanks again,
